PROBLEMS IN ALFALFA GROWING DISCUSSED AT HOME AND SCHOOL

HYLO — At the June meeting of the Hylo Home and School Association, Mr. Peter Maron, D. A. for the Lac La Biche Constituency, addressed the gathering on the topic of "Problems in Alfalfa Growing." He pointed out to the farmers, why, although the Lac La Biche area is the best in Alberta for alfalfa growing, some farmers reap no profits, why others take in up to 400 lbs per acre. The various reasons for this were outlined as follows:

A.—Crown Rot: Caused by a fungus growth on the crown in the spring of the year. This enemy is soil-borne, therefore the best cure is crop rotation.

B.—Black Streak: Another fungus enemy, this time on the stem and leaves of the alfalfa plant. For this there are two possible cures, crop rotation with grain for two to three years between alfalfa crops; and straw burning in the early spring.

C.—Russian Pigweed: This is a terrific enemy because, although a crop may be a success in every other way, being infected with this weed's seed it would be rejected by the seed companies. The gravity of the seed is the same as that of alfalfa, therefore it is difficult to separate. Again there are two possible cures. Cultivation with a stiff-tooth cultivator, followed by a cross-harrowing, both done quickly in the spring, before any leaf formation appears: Spray with 2-4-D when very young, in the spring.

D.—Legs erg: A straw-colored bug about one-half inch long and one-eighth inch wide, with a pronounced diamond mark on centre back. This bug lays eggs in the stem of alfalfa and itself sucks on the flower stems making the plant seedless. This bug can be destroyed by D.D.T. spray, only it is necessary to take caution in order to save the bees and to prevent loss of stock by poisoning. By spraying at night when the bees are not on the plant that will be avoided. N.B.: By deciding that crop will not be used for hay later on the D.D.T. will do no harm to stock. By burning straw in the spring a great deal can be done.

Some extras a farmer can put into his crop is: make an effort to encourage the cutter leaf bee to hive near the field by leaving piles of dead brush or stumps; fertilize crops to provide extra minerals to help plant feed itself.

Many questions were raised following the address, regarding sprays and types most effective on weeds. The discussion continued even during the lunch which was enjoyed tremendously before everyone ventured out into the rain, homeward bound.

Deep Sea Explorations

A few weeks ago the British research vessel, H.M.S. Challenger, dropped a weighted wire to a depth of almost seven miles in the Mariana Deep, about 200 miles southwest of Guam.

Exploring under the sea did not begin until the latter part of the eighteenth century. Early equipment used for measuring depths included a heavy weight and a line about half inch in diameter. Each time a measurement was desired, it took hours to lower and raise the weight.

The next method was of American origin: thin twine and a weight that detached itself when it hit bottom. The twine was followed by piano wire. In 1874, it was believed that an American ship set a speed record of measuring a five mile depth in two and a half hours.

Winding by hand was replaced by steam winding engines. The next development, echo-sounding, came about the time of the first World War. This process involved delicate instruments which measured the time that it takes sound echoed from the sea's bottom to reach the surface. By figuring the speed at which sound travels, depths can be determined.

Deep sea explorations have revealed that the Pacific is full of holes known as "deeps". A few examples are the Mindanao Deep (34,000 feet), the Tuscarora Deep (32,000 feet), the Kermadec Deep (31,000 feet), and the Solomon Deep (30,000 feet).

It has also been learned that many river channels, such as the Congo and the Indus, continue as deep canyons far into the ocean. Many such canyons have been found off the Atlantic Coast of the United States.

According to Dr. Hans Peterson, Director of the Oceanographic Institute of Goteborg, Sweden, in another billion years, new continents will appear in the middle of our present oceans. Dr. Peterson believes that the Atlantic Ocean will retain its well known S-shape, "but a new continent would appear along its whole length so that there would be two Atlantic seas."

Buying A Car In Britain

An example of the economic strain through which Great Britain is now passing was indicated recently when a spokesman of the British automobile industry asserted that British customers must wait five years for a new car from the date of order until delivery.

The reason this long wait is necessary, he explained, is that the bulk of production is now exported to earn much-needed foreign currency and goods. Therefore, the average British customer must wait several years before the small supply of new cars available in England provides him with a new vehicle.

Rationing and most of the war-time economic controls which were long ago discarded in Canada, are still necessary in England. The Conservatives, who came to power last October, have not removed these economic controls even though they are the party of private enterprise in Great Britain.

British citizens still get only a few ounces of meat a week, only small amounts of gasoline, at a high price, and even a limited supply of clothing, shoes and so forth. The average American, who can buy a new automobile or a new suit of clothes without any government interference, sometimes fails to appreciate the hard times which are still prevalent in Britain.

Though Canadian taxes are undoubtedly too high and though they should be reduced as soon as possible, it is nevertheless sobering to realize that the plight of the mother country is so severe, seven years after the end of World War II.

An Interesting Ride

Captain "Tug" Wilson, pilot of a commercial airliner which stops at Johannesburg, South Africa, recently experienced a ride he will not soon forget. As the pilot's plane reached flying speed and was leaving the airport, the radio operator noticed that a green snake was curling around the neck of the pilot.

The snake was none other than the dreaded mamba, a deadly African snake, and the radio operator, with the aid of another crew-member, managed to dislodge the snake, which coiled itself around the control column and struck at Radio Operator Rice, its fangs striking his collar. All the while, the pilot was scrambling to get back into the airport so that he could surrender his small enclosure to the mamba. From the control column, the snake fell on the instrument panel and then to the floor of the ship. It then vanished.

After the plane was landed, it was located and killed in a locker-room. The plane then took off again, with one less passenger, and much less excitement. It would probably be safe to say that the pilot will never experience a more devastating take-off and landing, and that he holds some sort of rare distinction in the annals of aviation having taken off with a rare African snake around his neck.

Why Editors Go Gray

When the local Baptist minister was leaving for a new charge, the congregation of a small Western Ontario town selected an ornamental mantel timepiece as a farewell gift.

To the horror of all concerned—the editor included—the local weekly reported the ceremony as being "climaxed by the presentation to the Reverend Clark of a handsome crock, which the recipient accepted with obvious delight and emotion."

Co-operative Farming

(From the Calgary Albertan)

Word out of Saskatoon this week was that four co-operative farms in north eastern Saskatchewan have folded up. It's easy to get a wrong impression from that.

The Saskatchewan government, with the co-operation and goodwill of such public organizations as the Canadian Legion and the farm associations, initiated co-operative farming ventures as a means of rehabilitating war veterans. On the whole the program has been a success. The four failures currently noted are due mostly to the unforeseeable difficulties arising before the farms had been solidly established.

There are two main objections to the ordinary type of individual farming on the prairies. One is that farm homes are too isolated for the women folk, and because of their isolation, lack the conveniences that seem to go with modern living. The other is that farming has become so mechanized that many individuals, especially those just starting out, cannot afford the expensive machinery that has to be used.

Co-operative farming was intended to get around these objections. The family homes are near together, in a little settlement, so that all can enjoy better facilities such as roads, school, power, and so on. And the menfolk, by pooling their machinery and working it long hours, can farm better and cheaper than they could individually.

Most of the many successful co-operative farms now in existence in Saskatchewan divide the land among the members, so that each has something all his own. That is a concession to the individualism so strong among farmers. Still there are some sociological problems to be worked out. Can the members or partners work more or less together without getting on each other's nerves? The answer seems to be that they can. But the idea is not quite out of the experimental stage.

This is a radical departure in farm living. It is a worthwhile trial. On something like it depends the survival of at least a segment of prairie agriculture.

WORK - STILL THE BEST BET

By T. W. PUE

The finest piece of advice we've heard handed out for a long time was given by a school principal to his graduating class. He told these promising youngsters who are setting out from High School not to take the job that promises the biggest salary right off the bat, but to choose a position in work that they like to do.

Many young men are taken in by offers of $10.00 to $20.00 a day pay rough-necking it in oil drilling crews,

driving trucks

and doing other types of work that require a minimum of skill. If these lads would make up their minds to continue with their education until they graduate in a work they will enjoy doing for work's sake, and not just for the immediate big pay, they will lead happier, fuller, more useful lives.

When I left high school I had no money with which to go to University and no way of earning any. Young men today can work their way through college by applying a little grit, elbow grease, and midnight oil in the right places and at the right time of year.

Trouble is today most of our school teachers are taken away with the idea of an education leading to a lifetime security program. In the last few years University graduates have been so much in demand that New York University's engineering student newspaper Quadrangle the other day sported a cartoon showing an employer waiting outside a student's office and the young man inside barking: "No, I'm not interviewing any more employers today."

Young men and women stepping out into a world in which their services are in such great demand may, if not prepared for it, fall flat on their faces if adversity hits.

ALGER WAS NO DOPE

There are more important angles to this business of making a living than just getting a job. Some of these concern holding a job after you've got one, and cutting down your chances of being fired in case business turns a trifle sour for your employer.

Under this head, the ideas of one Horatio Alger are still sound. Alger (1832-99) was a writer of boys' books—scads of them—in which the hero always won through to fame and fortune by working like a horse, being kind to the boss and as honest as Mr. Herbert Hoover (than whom they come no more honest), and never kidding himself that he could get something for nothing.

The Alger books had next to no literary merit. The ideas that underlay them have gone out of fashion with a lot of people in recent years.

Just the same, come the end of the present golden age for employment (as come it will, for all that), the young man or woman who has worked hard to please the management is likely to stay longer on the payroll than the one who has consistently acted as if he were doing management a great favor by collecting the periodic paycheck.

In other words, better take a job if it's handed to you on a silver platter, but immediately forget the platter and relentlessly give the job the best you've got.

EMPLOYMENT BETS

How about young people who aren't yet ready to begin earning their livings—those in high schools or the first or second year in college? What are the best employment bets for them a few years hence?

The National Association of Manufacturers (14 W. 49th St., New York 20, N. Y.) is an organization about which different people have different opinions. But at least the NAM has facilities for research in business opportunities and prospects all over the United States.

It recently put that equipment to work for the production of a most interesting and meaty booklet, called "Your Opportunities in Science." Copies have been sent to 60,000 junior and high school authorities, and others are being printed for free distribution to high school and college students.

What the NAM finds is that the wide field of science—electronics, biology, chemistry, the many branches of engineering, research, medicine, etc., etc.—in all likelihood offers the most and the best chances for young people today.

Science in one way or another enters into virtually everything Americans have and are. As the NAM booklet says, "Today's pioneer—the scientist—finds new lands to explore in test tubes. His hunting is done with the microscope. He seeks new horizons in the atomic cyclotron."

Incidentally, most of these pioneers earn better and better livings for themselves and their dependents.

If you're a young person with the slightest leaning toward any sort of science, this NAM booklet is one thing to latch onto and read carefully. You can hardly fail to get some valuable tips from it—and it may steer you toward a full and satisfying lifetime career.

Just one tip of our own, though, if we may: Don't ever buy the notion that science is the be-all and end-all of life, and that there is no real knowledge or truth outside science. Fall victim to that idea (as too many scientists have done), and you'll turn into a warped, one-sided and essentially ridiculous personality, no matter how brilliant your achievements may be.

Has some change been made at Edmonton Airport to send those giant airliners, with deafening roars, over the outlying communities at low altitudes? Are the planes too heavy to rise to a safe height, or is it the fault of the pilots? It's high time the Airport was moved out of Edmonton. The situation is getting unbearable.

A recent Voicer wanted to know where to use your best tires—on the front or rear wheels of your car. I say that if you have a blow-out in one of your rear tires, you still have control of your steering wheel, and can turn according to which rear tire blew out thus avoiding a spin or upset. But a blowout in a front tire, at a certain speed, is likely to pull the steering wheel out of your hands—and you take it from there. How do I know? Easy: I've had them both ways.

Fly Control on the Farm

The most common farm flies are House flies, Stable flies and Horn flies. They reproduce very rapidly, breeding in all kinds of decayed material and filth. There seems to be no way of getting completely rid of these pests, but the practices recommended here will, if followed, keep them down to an insignificant number. To be effective, any fly control campaign must include (1) proper steps in sanitation, and (2) the wise use of chemicals.

Sanitation. Good sanitation is the backbone of fly control. Without it, you cannot control flies effectively, regardless of the chemical or chemicals you use. Sanitation includes: destroying garbage; cleaning barnyards, scraping them right down to hard ground; cleaning out hog pens, hen houses and open cattle sheds; raking up and burning weeds and other farmyard refuse; treating outdoor privies with borax every day; and hauling out fresh stable manure to the field every day or two. A lot of work, yes, but necessary for best fly control results.

Chemicals. To control flies around the house, spray porches and doorways with Lindane or Chlordane. DDT will give satisfactory control where light infestations of house flies occur. As a spray for the dairy barn use Lindane or Methoxychlor. For other buildings Chlordane may be used instead of Lindane. Treat all places where flies roost, and repeat the applications every 3 to 5 weeks. Avoid contamination of feed and water with Lindane and Chlordane. Concerning cattle sprays, Methoxychlor is recommended for dairy cattle. It can also be used on beef cattle that are within 60 days of market. If the cattle will not be marketed for more than 60 days, then a DDT spray is recommended. No matter what chemical you use be sure and follow the directions and precautions of the manufacturer.

Farm fly control pays. It safeguards health, increases milk and meat production from livestock, and adds to the comfort of farm living.

Couple Married On Friday, June 13

GRASSLAND — Friday, June 13, proved a lucky day for Vivian Ludwick and Leonard Corse, for on that day they were united in the bonds of matrimony. The ceremony took place at Holy Trinity Church, Grassland, and was performed by Archdeacon Humphries of Athabasca.

At 1 p.m. the bride, who looked charming in her lovely lace gown, was given away by her brother-in-law, John Neigle of Atmore. Her attendants were Amelia Kazmierczak, dressed in pink, and Mary Aleksuk, dressed in blue. The best men were Donald and Walter Corse, brothers of the groom. The organist was Mr. McNeil, school principal at Grassland.

Confetti was thrown as the happy couple came out of the church doors after the signing of the register. Snaps were taken by many admiring friends and relations, then the whole party left for Boyle in the gaily decorated cars to have their photographs taken at Semi-Tone Studios.

Reception for the close relatives was held at the home of the groom at 5 o'clock. Afterwards a buffet supper was served for friends and neighbors.

The dance at the hall was well attended, and many gifts were received.

PROTECT YOUR CROP INVESTMENT BY WINDROWING THE McCORMICK-DEERING WAY

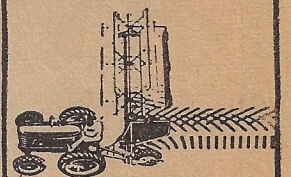

To prevent any damage to your grain crop from weather, insects, weeds or moisture, windrowing before threshing is certainly a step forward in farming practices—especially when done the McCormick-Deering way!

The No. 120 Windrower (12 or 15-foot size) handles the grain quickly and easily in its smooth operation. Adjusts to crops of all heights. Completely power-driven, it has the light draft that comes from use of numerous ball and roller bearings, and gears running in oil. The No. 6, in 6 and 8-foot sizes, is built for use on smaller acreages.

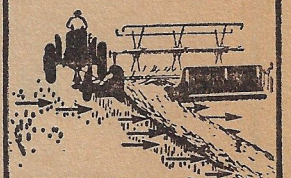

You'll probably agree with us that windrowing can mean a better grade of grain under many conditions...and now we'd like to point out how well a McCormick-Deering Windrower can do this job for you. Stop by next time you're in town.

Low-built windrower bends stubble.

Grain laid like lattice on rising stubble.

Off-ground windrow permits free air circulation.

Entertainment Galore!

LAC LA BICHE—Judging by the Bulletin Board, Lac La Biche is a busy place, and well-entertained. Posters are out for Vancouver Death Dodgers car and motorcycle thrill show; a Happy Russell dance with his prairie ramblers, and several picnics that are coming up. One poster is causing some curiosity. It is for a "Kiss Dance." "What is a 'kiss dance' anyway," everyone wants to know. The Clifford Entertainers are supplying the answer. As posters go, the masterpiece is a hand-made beauty done in black and white for a wedding dance in honor of Miss Elaine Heatherington and Mr. Alfred Langevin, at the Memorial Hall on June 24.

LETTERS TO LOUISA

Dear Louisa,
I am a widow, thirty years old, and have a little girl of five. Since my husband died, I have been working as a stenographer and my mother takes care of my daughter. I live with my parents.
I met a man that I have fallen in love with about six months ago and he has asked me to marry him. But he suggested one thing that shocked me and I feel that I must give him up. He wants me to leave my daughter with her grandparents and the two of us have a home of our own.

What do you think of such an attitude? M.G.L.

Answer:

I think that this man's love for you is a selfish one. If he truly loved you, he would understand that no mother could be happy to give up her child to someone else.
He would try to be a real father to this little girl, who has lost her own father for he would know that by doing so, he would be making the woman he professes to love, very happy.

He is probably a bit jealous too, and is not mature enough to understand that the love of a husband and the love of one's child there is room for both in any good woman's heart.

Unless he changes in this feeling of possession, I think you would be wise in giving him up.
Try to throw the two of them together as much as possible, for most little girls are quite attractive and if he has never been around children very much, he may not know what joy they bring to a home.

In your case, you have your parents near to help when you have engagements in the evening but duty to a child comes before acquiring a new husband.

Louisa.

Do Not Probe To Remove Insect

Picnics and days out of doors sometimes result in a child with an insect in the ear. This can be serious if not removed at once. A drop or two of olive oil may float it out, but probing is dangerous.

A more simple remedy is to attract the insect by holding a flashlight near the ear.

CHARTERED BANKS HAIL RETURN "NORMAL, COMPETITIVE, BANKING"

MONTEBELLO, Que. — L. G. Gillett, President of The Canadian Bankers' Association, declared here today the chartered banks "welcome a return to normal, competitive banking" with the lifting of bank credit restrictions by the Bank of Canada a month ago.

In his address to the annual meeting of the Association, he noted that restrictions on both consumer credit and bank credit had been lifted in recent weeks. Both were "welcome steps, as they indicated a belief that inflation has been brought under some measure of control in Canada."

"I am sure I am speaking for the whole business community in saying that, just as everyone was prepared to co-operate speedily and completely with the government in its anti-inflation program, we welcome removal of restrictions and impediments to ordinary business practice as they become unnecessary or inadvisable."

"In applying the bank credit restrictions, the banks sought to further the national interest and now we welcome removal of restrictive banking, so long an integral part of Canadian life. If the policy contributed to the lessening of inflationary pressures in Canada and helped to preserve the purchasing power of the consumer's dollar, the banks are content and amply repaid for the difficulties and inconveniences involved."

"From all this, it should not be gathered that all danger from inflation has been left behind. Far from it, but I will say this much we have beaten off its initial threat and stand better prepared for whatever the future may hold."

Mr. Gillett saw prospects for Canadian business over the next four months "made cloudy" by various uncertainties. But he believed that still active inflationary pressures would tend, at least temporarily, to be kept in "uneasy balance" by the opposing forces of deflation which had shown some signs of developing.

Mr. Gillett reserved judgment on the estimate of some observers that the decline in numerous raw material prices pointed to "an end of inflation and even a decline in business everywhere." Conceding that "they may well be right", he suggested that accelerated defence spending might offset the slackened demand for the products of some industries.

With inflation stayed off, at least temporarily, and tremendous plans afoot for private capital investment in the next few years. Mr. Gillett asserted Canadians had "every cause for confidence over the long pull". He cited figures of the investment programs, running into hundreds of millions of dollars, planned for the mining, pulp and paper, electrical, chemical, aluminum, oil and other industries, and commented:

"These figures of future capital investment are merely scattered examples of what lies ahead in Canadian development. They illustrate the basic fact that Canada has the greatest accumulation of undeveloped natural resources in the world and that Canada is on the threshold of spectacular progress and development, the opening of a dynamic era."

The Association head emphasized that it had been private enterprise that had "built Canada to its present dimensions and is laying plans for such marked development in the immediate future."

"It is the spirit of enterprise that is on the march in Canada today", he continued. "So much so, that it sets Canada apart from almost all other nations. It has given Canadians the second highest standard of living in the world and permitted this country of only 14 million people to do more, and in a shorter time, than any comparable nation."

"Our progress has been based on work, thrift, investment and enterprise, and if we hold to those principles—and are given peace—our future progress is assured."

Mr. Gillett took the occasion of the meeting to raise the question of how much longer it would be possible to avoid an increase in the rates of interest on bank lending, in the face of substantial rises in the costs of doing business. In this regard he said:

"We all know that unlike other countries, there has been no general increase in banking interest rates in Canada for many years, but in the face of steadily rising costs, we do not know how long this can continue."

Pointing out that the total of three items of banking cost—staff salaries, taxes and interest on savings deposits—had more than doubled between 1944 and 1951, he commented:

"In most businesses, when costs go up, selling prices follow, but that has not been true recently of interest rates in Canada. Lending rates have gone up in the United States, in Britain and in several other countries. We have tried to keep them from going up in Canada but, frankly, I do not know how much longer we can succeed."

In this connection Mr. Gillett emphasized that, contrary to opinions sometimes entertained, returns to bank stockholders were not high. "Unreal and ambiguous" estimates of 14 per cent and 16 per cent dividends were calculated on the nominal par value of shares. Actually, 1951 statistics showed an "exceedingly modest return" averaging between 4½ and 4 per cent in shareholders' equity investment, including the premium paid to buy most bank stock and the profits put back in the business as rest or reserve funds.

Mr. Gillett pointed also to the tremendous expansion of staff and operating facilities which the banks had had to undertake, in order to keep abreast of the demands for banking service from an increasing population, an expanding economy and newly developed areas of settlement. In the past 10 years, the number of chartered bank employees had increased by over 61 per cent, and the number of banking offices had increased by 486 to a total of 3,776 branches and sub-agencies. In the same period, Mr. Gillett

Scald three cups of the milk in the top of the double boiler. Add cornmeal, sugar, spices, salt and molasses. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly until the mixture thickens or for about 20 minutes. Pour into a greased baking pan. Add the remaining cup of milk, without stirring. Bake in a slow oven (300 deg. F.) for about 2½ hours. Serve warm with milk or cream or ice-cream. Yield 6-8 servings.

noted average salary rates had been raised on a scale comparing favorably with the levels prevailing in similar fields, and early this year the banks had initiated the five-day week in selected branches to attract and retain a high calibre of employee. This had been necessitated, he said, because "we were losing trained, competent and well-paid employees to other institutions that were closed on Saturdays."

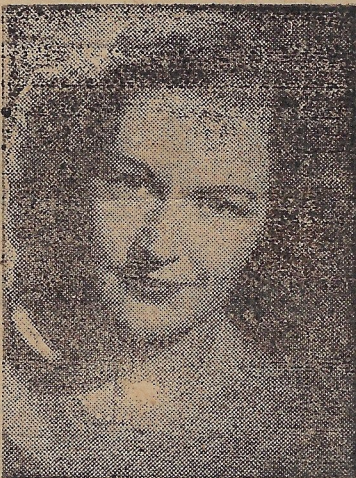

"We are grateful to the banking public for its acceptance of this innovation in Canada," Mr. Gillett added. "We have tried to minimize inconvenience to our customers by providing extra banking hours on Fridays in most of the branches closing Saturdays, particularly for making deposits and cashing pay cheques. I take this opportunity to acknowledge the splendid co-operation of bank customers in this attempt to benefit the working conditions of bank staffs."

Mr. Gillett reported that despite considerable publicity about bank hold-ups, there were fewer last year than in 1950 and there had been 45 convictions for bank robbery across Canada on top of 44 in the preceding year. Since January 1, 1950, the banks had paid out a total of $114,295 in rewards to citizens who had aided in apprehension of bank robbers, to police forces in recognition of outstanding efforts by their members, and in gratuities to widows of police officers and citizens killed in attempts to apprehend bank robbers.
